Definition of cookies

Cookies are strings of texts sent by the websites (so-called 'publishers' or 'first party') visited by the user or by other websites or web servers (so-called 'third parties') to the user's computer or mobile device, which stores and sends them back to the website from which they were received whenever the user visits that website again.

This allows the website to identify the user both for the duration of the session and for longer periods and to automatically adjust to the user and optimize the user's browsing experience.

Types of cookies

- According to personal data protection regulations, cookies may be divided into 'technical' cookies, which do not require the user's consent, and analytical cookies different from technical and 'profiling' cookies, which require the user's consent.

Technical cookies

Technical cookies are used for the sole purpose of 'carrying out the transmission of a communication over an electronic communication network or to the extent strictly necessary for the provider of an Information Society service explicitly requested by the subscriber or user to provide such service' (see art. 122, par. 1, of the Italian Privacy Code).

This type of cookies is further divided into:

- Navigation or session cookies. These cookies are essential to browse and use all functions of the website, such as maintaining the session active and accessing restricted areas. They are strictly necessary since the requested services could not be provided without them. These cookies do not collect information used for commercial purposes.
- Analytics cookies. They collect and analyse information on the use of the website by visitors (visited pages, number of accesses, time spent on the website, etc.) to optimize the website management. They are considered technical cookies if they are only used for statistical purposes as well as if, in case of third-party cookies, at least the fourth component of the IP address is hidden and if third parties do not combine such analytics cookies with other elements (e.g. customer's files or statistics of visits to other websites) and do not transfer them to any third party.
- Functionality cookies. They allow the user to browse the website according to a series of selected criteria (e.g. the language) in order to optimize the user's browsing experience. All information collected by these cookies is anonymous.

Enabling technical cookies allows the website to work at best.
